Business Networking

Wednesday February 22, 2012

Companies today look for individuals who can confidently and effectively network and build professional relationships. People do business with those they like and trust. This is why it is absolutely critical in today's business arena to conduct yourself with professionalism and poise while networking. In this seminar, learn tips on how to build your database, nurture established relationships, and turn new contacts into contracts.

Carey McBeth is a nationally recognized etiquette trainer. She is dedicated to helping individuals increase their professionalism, improve their people skills, and enhance their personal brand.

Since graduating from The Protocol School of Washington® in 2002, Carey has provided training programs, keynotes and individual coaching to Fortune 500 companies, universities and international conferences.

She currently delivers business etiquette training programs at BC's two largest universities: the University of British Columbia (Sauder School of Business) and Simon Fraser University (Beedie School of Business).
